SCIENCE AND PROGRESS.

NOTES AND COMMENTS ON SUBJECTS OF POPULAR INTEREST.

A Description with Illustrations of Some Halitones of Remarkable Size and Unusual Crystalline Formations—Movements That Characterize the Flight of Birds.

On the 9th of June, 1887, there was a fall of hail at Bjele-Kiuntsch, a village lying to the southwest of Tiflis, in which halitones occurred in the remarkable crystalline forms shown (reduced about one-third in size) in the accompanying cut. The drawings were made in the natural size by a Russian professor, and first published in Nature. These halitones consist of a central nucleus, surrounded by large ice crystals somewhat resembling those of quartz, and, like that mineral, belonging to the hexagonal or rhombohedral system of crystallization.

REMARKABLE HALITONES.

Commenting upon these extraordinary specimens, Popular Science News says that the most remarkable point in connection with them is the fact that, judging from our present knowledge, a very long time must have been occupied in their formation. As a general rule, the larger and more perfect a crystal is, the more slowly it must be formed, and we cannot understand how so heavy a body as a halitone can be supported in the air long enough for the crystallization to take place so perfectly. We must admit either that these stones were formed under the influence of natural forces or conditions still unknown to us, or that in certain circumstances aqueous vapor or water may be solidified into large crystals with the rapidity which we should naturally expect to occur in the sudden condensation of moisture in the upper air.

The genesis of hail is still an unsolved meteorological problem, and presents so many difficulties that one scientist was driven to the theory that halitones were of interplanetary origin, like meteors. This remarkable hypothesis, however, only brings up the still greater problem as to how the halitones could enter and pass through the atmosphere without being instantly dissipated in vapor by the heat evolved, as shown by the extreme temperature to which the meteors themselves are raised in the passage.

Smokesheet Explosives.

In a recent lecture on smokeless explosives, Sir Frederick Abel, who is a well known English authority on this subject, expressed the impression entertained by many persons that the new smokeless powder would be also smokeless. He finds that there is hardly any noticeable difference between the explosive violence of the new and the black powder. If anything, the report of the former is sharper and more ringing, as well as of shorter duration.

In reference to molinite and other French explosives he said, that despite the secrecy with which their composition is kept, it is pretty certain that the chief element is picric acid; and, as this body is exceedingly unstable, it is probable that but little more will be heard about these much vaunted destructive explosives.

Mr. Nobel, the inventor of dynamite and other efficient blasting agents, is credited with being the most successful of contemporary experimenters with high explosives. He appears to have derived from nitroglycerine and nitro-cotton a material which, when treated with camphor, compares very favorably with gun cotton as to its ballistic properties, its stability and uniformity, besides being almost absolutely smokeless. This powder has been tried in small arms in Italy, and reports are current that Mr. Krupp is carrying on experiments with it in guns of various caliber.

How Birds Fly.

M. Marey, a French scientist, has just published an interesting account of the flight of birds. It appears that hitherto very little information has been collected with regard to the movements of birds on the wing, and in order to obtain some accurate knowledge the author has made a series of careful studies.

Among other details he points out that the flight of most birds is very different from that of the "king of the air," who are able to maintain themselves on the wing for a long time without any movement, resting, as it were, on the air. The smaller birds, on the other hand, have to "pump" or divide the air with their wings continually. The illustration shows the position of a hawk resting on the air and soaring upward.

To Detect Cotton Seed Oil in Lard.
The following is a new method proposed by Dr. Taylor, of the United States agricultural department, for detecting cotton seed oil in lard: Dissolve in 50 cubic centimeters of petroleum benzene 140 grains of a mixture of lard and cotton seed oil. Heat slightly to secure a perfect solution of the lard. Animal tissues should be carefully removed by passing the liquid while warm through fine muslin. Fill a test tube with the solution, and place in ice water. In about twenty minutes the lard falls to the bottom of the tube by reason of its insolubility in cold benzene, while the cotton seed oil remains in solution in the benzene. Separate the lard from the cotton seed oil by filtration through fine bibulous paper, and subject the recovered fat to mechanical pressure between several folds of the filtering paper, by which means the remaining benzene is absorbed. The solidified fat may be removed from the paper with a palette knife. The cotton seed oil is separated from the benzene by means of a sand bath, which evaporates the benzene.

Several rows of velvet round the bottom of the skirt is a revival of an old style, and dashes off a dress aboody.

The Right Way to Serve Game.
To carve a partridge, first remove the right wing and leg, then those on the left side and next divide the body in two lengthways. Only young partridges should be roasted; the older birds are better made up in salads or soups. Quail is served rolled in a thin slice of bacon and inclosed in a gram loaf. It is also cut in two, like roe and ruff birds, and larks may be treated in the same way. The thrush is cooked like the quail, but it may be carved either limb by limb or cut in two lengthways.—Paris Letter.

Covered with Sores

Boy one year and a half old. Face and body in a terrible condition, being covered with sores. Suffering springs fall. Cured by Cuticura Remedies.

Cured by Cuticura

I have used CUTICURA REMEDIES in two cases where it proved to be successful. The first was in the case of a boy one year and a half old. His face and body were in a terrible condition, being completely covered with sores. I took him to the Massena Spring, but failed to improve any. I was then advised to try the CUTICURA REMEDIES, which I did. He took one and one-half bottles of CUTICURA RESOLVENT, when his skin was as smooth as could be and is today. I used the CUTICURA on his sores and the CUTICURA SOAP in washing him. He is now five years of age, and is right. The other case was a disease of the scalp, which cured by washing with the CUTICURA SOAP and rubbing in the CUTICURA, one bottle of CUTICURA RESOLVENT being used. They have proved successful in every case. It is surprising how a child will improve under their treatment.

JOHN R. BERO, Hogshead, N. Y.

Itching and Burning.

I have been afflicted since last March with a skin disease the doctors called eczema. My face was covered with sores and sores, and the itching and burning were almost unbearable. Seeing your CUTICURA REMEDIES so highly recommended, I decided to give them a trial, using the CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP externally, and RESOLVENT internally for four months. I told myself, cured, in gratitude for which I make this public statement.

A Proud Parent.

Indignant Father—Hadin't you done any thing but laugh?
Boy—No, sir.
"And the teacher whipped you for that?"
The second—'I'll teach him!"

"Yes, and he whipped me just as hard; He's a great big man."

(Not quite so indignant)—"H'm! You mustn't laugh in school, Johnny. It's against the rules."—Chicago Tribune.

Ought to Come Higher.

Enterprising Manufacturer—I will raise the offer, modest, to $5.00. Remember, all I ask is the use of your name.

Hesitating Prima Donna—I hardly know what to say. If it were soap or complexion powder I should accept the offer in a moment, but— I am not quite sure whether our sales are equally or proper. Suppose we say $10.00?—Chicago Tribune.

At the Office, Brown, Lawyer.

(Enter Mr. Sorrel, a client.)

Sorrel—Hail, hail! No wonder he didn't hear me knock; I wouldn't have either under the circumstances. The young dog!

Enter him.

(Five minutes later. Enter Brown.)

Brown—Hail, Sorrel, is that you? Come into the private office; your wife's been waiting some time to see you.—Life.
